Energy storage container self-tapping screws

Overview

What are the different types of container screws?

These screws are designed to meet a wide variety of needs, with options including Torx-Head and Self-Tapping screws. The Self-Tapping screws, in particular, are a standout product, offering ease of installation and a secure fit, making them ideal for both repairing existing containers and constructing new ones.

Which self-tapping screws are best?

The JA/JZ1 self-tapping screws are the reliable experts when it comes to building projects in highly corrosive environments. The JA1/JZ1 feature the material class stainless steel HCR 1.4529 and thus have the highest corrosion-protection class. The EJOT self-tapping screws form the thread in a pre-drilled hole.

How do EJOT self-tapping screws work?

The EJOT self-tapping screws form the thread in a pre-drilled hole. They feature a coarse or fine pitch thread. At the bottom of the screw, there is a dog point or a rolled point, depending on the application. The self-tapping screws are completed by an optional pre-assembled sealing washer. » Further information
